

THE AMOURS
OF
Clitophon and Leucippe.
ILLUSTRATED,
In Six NOVELS.

VIZ.

- I. The FORCE of LOVE described.
 - II. The Disappointed BRIDE.
 - III. The Distressed LOVERS.
 - IV. VIRTUE its own REWARD.
 - V. The Lascivious WIDOW.
 - VI. The HAPPY CONSUMMATION.
-

Written in GREEK,
By ACHILLES TATIUS.

Now first rendred into ENGLISH.

— — Veterum repetamus Amores.

L O N D O N :
Printed for T. BICKERTON, at the Crown in Pater Noster Row, 1720.
Price 1 s. 6d.

THE AMOURS
OF

Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. I.

A R G U M E N T.

Clitophon Discovers his Parentage, Leucippe and her Mother Panthia are sent by Sostratus to Hippias the Father of Clitophon in Byzantium. Clitophon falls in Love with Leucippe, B and

and is instructed by Clinias in the Mysteries of Courtship.

THE Violence of the Tempest drove me upon the Coasts of Sidon, where I performed Sacrifices in the Temple of Venus; a Ceremony incumbent upon all who have returned safe from the Dangers of the Sea. I was extremely Delighted with a Survey of the Magnificence of the Temple, and its Ornaments; a Part whereof was a Collection of Original Paintings, performed by the best Masters in the Universe: I beheld there the Story of the fair Europa, and the Transformed * Deity, presented in their Voyage through the Sea: But what had the most sensible effect upon my Fancy, was a little Cupid leading the Bull, and

* Jupiter turned himself into a Bull for the Love of Europa.

look-looking back upon it with an Air, which shewed the great Pleasure he took in holding the Supreme of Deities perplexed in his Snares. I was so Ravished with this delightful Object, that I could not restrain the following Exclamation. Is the Command of Heaven as well as Earth vested in the Power of Love ; if so, I shall resign my self to his Superior sway, since Jove himself knows not how to resist it. Ah ! Sir, said a Gentleman, who stood near me, a sad Experience convinces me of the Truth you have delivered ; I have suffered more than a Martyr from his destructive Power. Pray Sir, I Replied, in what Nature were the Distresses you speak of, your looks indeed declare you a Voluntary to that Deity. You recal to me (said he) the Memory of the Confused Series of Adventures which when I relate, will seem to be Fables rather than what have really happened. This Place I answered, is very Improper, for so long an Entertainment, there's a very delightful Grove of Plane Trees upon the Back-side of the Temple, if you please we'll retire, and there I'll trouble you with the Repetition of your Story: Upon this we performed obeisance to the Shrine, and sat down under the shade of the Grove.

The Place which gave me Birth, he began, is Phænicia, my Father's Name is Hippias, my own is Clitophon, and my Uncle's (because you'll hear it often mentioned) is Sostratus. My Mother was snatch'd from me by Death before I knew her, so that my Father Married a Second Wife, by whom he had a Daughter named Caligo, whom he designed for my Embraces. When I was Nineteen Years of Age, my Father began to think of Confirming our Love and his own Purposes by our Mar-

Marriage. 'Twas then that Fortune discovered the Mazes she reserved for me to unravel by a Dream. Methought I was possest in the Embraces of a most Lovely Virgin, and had a compleat Fruition of all her Charms. In this Extasie of Bliss, there appeared to me a Woman of a frightful Figure, her Complexion was Dark and Severe, her Hair was knots of Snakes ; in her Left Hand was a Torch, in the Right a Sickle, with which at one stroke she dissolved the most Fortunate Union that was enjoyed in Imagination. I Instantly awaked full of Anger, that my Desires were intercepted, and fear of the Events which I foresaw would attend this amasing Presage. While I was taken up with these Passions, my Servant drew the Curtain, and told me that my Aunt and her Daughter Leucippe were Arrived from Byzantium. When I came into the Withdraw-drawing Room to pay my Devoirs to the Ladies : The Beauty of Leu- cippe Displaced my Reason, which resigned its heat to the Assaults of her Charms. I stood as one struck with Confusion, unable to restore my self to the Condition of Acting one Thing with Decency : And had certainly been observed by the Company, could they have looked upon any thing but Leucippe. We were then called to Dinner ; the Ladies took their Seat at the upper end, and the Gentlemen below, and 'twas my good Fortune to sit where I could have the clearest view of Leucippe in all her Splendor. For she had taken care to dress her self that Day, it being the First of her Arrival to the greateit Advantage:

 And if the Divine Fair, did design a Conquest, she was sure of her Slave Clitophon, who all the time of the Entertainment gazed at her Beauty with Pleasure and Admiration.

tion. When Dinner ended, my Father called in some Musick, which sung how Apollo Lamented the Loss of his Daphne, by her being changed into Laurel, which the Poet ever after wore for his Garland. This enhanced my Torment, for the Story of an Amour enrages the Passion of Love, and the Protection of a great Example to it Encourages the Desires of Enjoyment. I could not but Expostulate with myself, was Apollo a God in Love, did he not resign the Deity, to admire the Charms of his Daphne, and shall Modesty prevail with me, to quit my Devotion to the Divine Leucippe? Such was the Entertainment of my Waking and Sleeping, Thoughts, till the next Morning, when my Servant very unfortunately disturbed them, by telling me that it was time to arise.

A Relation of mine called Clinias, had formerly experienced the Anxieties of Love : I used to Ridicule the folly of that Passion, and exclaim against his Imprudence, in being engaged in it. Well, Clitophon, he'd reply, a time will surely come, when you'll be convinced that I deserved your Pity, rather than Scorn : Not many Days passed before he came to our House. Ah ! Clinias (said I) I am now sufficiently Punished with the Misfortune I laught at you for submitting to ; at this, he clap'd his Hands, and expressed the most evident Demonstrations of Joy, and said, this Information was unnecessary, for I beheld it in your Countenance ; we were for the present, diverted from this Discourse, by Caricles's coming in ; He was a near Friend to Clinias, and had not long before received a Gallant Horse from him, as a Present : As soon as he came in, in, he said, my Dearest Clinias, I can't be easie till I have disclosed to you a secret which has been long continued in my Heart: Clinias fearing some Misfortune had befallen him; was impatient to hear it, and told him that no endeavours should be wanting to rescue him from any Danger. My Father he answered, has designed a Lady to my Embraces, so extremely disagreeable, that I protest I can't bear the Thoughts of her; is a Beautiful Woman an Intollerable Evil? A Coarse one must be a Torment. O Curse upon all Wealth! It subdues the Charms of Love, and Engages the Cruel Avaro, more than all Glories of the Divine Amasia! Clinias, when he heard this, discovered the greatest Tenderness for the hard Fortune of his Caricles, and endeavoured to dispossess him of the desires he had Entertained for every thing Amiable in the Female Sex.

They were sent from Heaven for a Revenge upon Prometheus's Theft ; who entailed a Curse upon Mankind for his Audaciousness. They are Syrens to delude in Expectation, and Fiends to Torment in Enjoyment. The Enamoured Youth is a Captive to their Lust, and a Slave to the Gratification of their Inconsistent Humours. Read the Story of Antiquity, you'll find their Treachery to the Brightest Heroes ; what did not Agamemnon suffer for his Clytemnestra ? Paris for the Adulterous Helen ? These are Examples should affright my Caricles from the pursuit of his Ruine ; and evince to all Mankind the Inconstancy of the Sex.

I could not hear the whole Sex exposed for the Imperfections of one Branch of it, for the Thoughts of the Cœlestial Leucippe forbade me to entertain the leaft Censure upon any of them. 'Twould be (I said) an an Affront unpardonable to hear these Indignities offered to any thing which bore Relation to Leucippe, did not the esteem I have for Clinias overcome the Suggestions of my Passion, shall the Glory of her Sex be Arraigned in the Calumnies aspersed upon the Inferior Multitude, shall she be tainted with the Faults which can't belong to so Illustrious Charms. I came to you to receive instructions how to please the Divine Fair, and shall I hear her represented in the Deformity of a Fiend? Clinias replied, I am not at all perplexed for an Excuse, for you gave me one your self. But I confess the concern I have for the Distress of my Dear Caricles, produced in me some Sentiments a little too unguarded. No! if Leucippe be the Mistress of your Passion, she deserves more Praise than the whole Sex beside does Infamy from Mankind. But I see no Reason you have have to accuse your Fate of Cruelty, since never had a Lover more fair Opportunities of Access to a more Lovely object of his desire. How many would bless their Destiny for the sight of the Mistress of their Hearts ? You enjoy it every Day. How many to hear her speak ? When every time you see her, you hear something inexpressibly ravishing from the Divine Leucippe, and the happiness of all this is, that you are ever under Aspect of the Illustrious Constellation. Oh ! But I Replied, she does not know that I Love her, that her influence is more Ascendant upon me, than any other she Converses with. The happiness you speak of, every one in the Family enjoys ; what Pleasure then can I perceive in a Fruition which diffuses it self upon all who know her ? Oh ! Could I perceive some uncommon Instance of her Favour, one tender Glance directed to

Chi-

Clitophon, would rescue him from the most dejected Misery.

Clinias Replied, you make your self very unacquainted in the Mysteries of Love ; should the Virgin first begin the Address, she'd resign her Conquest, and put her self under the Dominion of her Slave, You are first to discover your Passion, and than the least Favour is an Encouragement to your Pursuit. The Lady who never had an Humble Servant, fears neglect from all she does not know, that she deserves Admiration, unless she's first Admired. You must therefore let her know that you Love her, and then she'll give you some hopes of a Return of her Passion. Ah ! Clinias, I Replied, my Merits seem too low to advise such an Hope, and the fear of Offending, withdraws the desire I have she should know my Passion : However, since you are experienced in the Affair of Love,

I could discard my Modesty for once, if you'd inform me how I should begin the Assault.

Clinias answered, you must seek all opportunities of being alone with her, and then observe that your Discourse have nothing in it Obscure or Immodest. The Nature of Woman is Light, and prone to the Enjoyments of Love; it abhors the Mention of what they most vehemently desire, and the Breach of Modesty is to them more Criminal in Word than in Act. The Ladies of Pleasure will disclose their Desire, but the Virgin Blushes when she hears of it. If she loves the Thought, yet her Modesty recoils at the intimation of it. If you said any thing which she resents, you must submit to her Reproof, and Mollifie it by the Endearments of a Kiss ; if she resist, her resistance must invigorate your Attack, and if that does not prevail, prevail, Dissimulation is the Way to win her.

This Advice gave me a great Encouragement to the Conquest of my Mistress. Nothing, I thought, could oppose it, but Obedience to the Commands of my Father; Leucippe's Charms pleaded on the one side, and the Duty of a Son made Caligo appear more Lovely; than ever. Necessity of Fate strove against the Obligations of Nature. To be happy, I thought, with either, was impossible; if I enjoyed Leucippe, I lost the Affection of a tender Father, and the Embraces of Caligo would divest me of a Capacity of Receiving the least Favour from the most Exquisite Beauty in the Universe. The fear of the later of these Distresses overcame, so I thanked Clinias for his Instructions, and resolved to visit the Divine Leucippe.

I had not enquired long before I heard she was alone; taking the Diversion of my Father's Garden? There was a Grove exquisitely contrived for the Coolness of Shade, and the delight of the Odours which it scattered into every part of the Garden. The Branches of the Trees united themselves, that their Leaves might defend the Walks from the Sun, tho' every Gale of Wind lifted them up to admit the Warmth of its Beams. This Temperature of the Air, recommended it to the frequency of all who had a Mind to retire from the heat of the day, into Sylvan recesses. In the midst of it was a Fountain Encircled with the Greatest Variety of Flowers that the Bountiful Earth could supply. I was admiring these Beautiful Productions of Nature, when I spied Leucippe coming toward the Fountain, and rejoiced that I might now have some Opportunity tunity of Discourse with my Contemplation upon the Flowers, was immediately changed to the Survey of them in the Face of Leucippe, which represented them in a brighter Lustre than their Natural Sphere. The Colour of the Violet, the Rose and Lilly were so well disposed in her Complexion, that it seemed to be no other than a Composition of them.

I was now more Ravished with her Charms than ever ; walked to her, desired I might have the Honour to lead her to a Seat under the Shade of some Palm-Trees, to which she very Modestly Condescended, I took her by the Hand; but Heavens, with what Extasie did the gentle touch Transfix me !

When we came to the Seat, I desired my Servant Satyrus, who attended, to divert us with a Story.

Satyrus immediately knew what sort of Relation would please me best, and Addressed himself to us, in the following Manner,

The Observation of the Trees, which refresh you with their Shade, Encourages me to hope that an Account of the amazing Passion, between these Senseless Animals would not be unpleasant to you, since it seems to Evince the Wonderful Power of Love.

It extends not only to Brutes, but things Inanimate; the Load-Stone loves the Iron, and by a Touch of it Attracts with an Amorous Heat. I should not venture upon the Credit of Philosophers to justifie what I am doing, but the Experience of Husbandmen contribute an undeniable Demonstration to the Truth of it. The Palm-trees are discriminated by Sexes, and the Affection of the Male to the Female, is evidently strong; because if she be be planted at a distance from him, he withers and decays. To relieve his Distemper, the skilful Artist goes upon an Ascent, and observes which way the Male inclines, when he has found out the Disease, he administers a Cure, by fliving some Branches from the Female, and inserting them into the Body of the Male: He no sooner receives the Prescript, but flourishes and revives in the Embraces of his Comfort. The Waters too testify their Attendance to this Passion, witness the Stream of Alpheus, which conveys it self through the Sea, with no Alteration, till he comes to the Enjoyment of his loved Aretbusa.

I observed Leucippe extremely pleased at these Relations, and at every tender word, I gently pressed her Hand, and perceived such delightful Emotions in her, as assured me she took no Offence at what I did. I was going to order Satyr-

rus

rus to go on, when a Servant came to tell her that her Musick-Master waited her Return. I gave Satyrus a Gratification for the Good Success of his Entertainment, and waited on the tender Leucippe, to the Room where she Sung to the Mu-fick..

T. H. E

THE AMOURS
OF
Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. II.

A R G U M E N T.

Leucippe Sings to her Lute ; Her Voice inflames the Passion of Clitophon more than ever. He continues his Courtship with Success. His Marriage with Caligo is prever-prevented by her being Stolen away by Calisthenes. His Servant Satyrus contrives Means for his Admittance to the Embraces of Leucippe, but his Designs are Defeated by the Intrusion of Leucippe's Mother Panthia into her Apartment. Clitophon fearing lest any disgrace should arise from this Discovery of the Intrigues with Leucippe, Clinias and Satyrus take Shipping for Alexandria.

HEN we Arrived to the Apartment, the Musician desired her to Sing the Combado of the Lyon and the Boar to the Lute when she had Performed that, they Sang the Song of the Rose.

Should

Should Kings o'er Flowers appointed be
 The Rose should have the Sovreignty.
 That Maiden Blush of Modest Earth
 Appearing e'er she has brought forth
 Her Summers Fruit, That Flower
 so Fair Perfuming, where it grows, the Air
 With sweetest scent our Sense doth Touch,
 We ne'er can Praise that Flower too much.

The softness of her Voice exacted the thanks of all the Company, and none was more forward in expressing the Satisfaction he received than the Amorous Clitophon. These and other Diversions engaged us till Supper; when the Glances and Ogles

Ogles we received each from the other, vanquished the Diligent Sollicitations of our Appetites. They continued to be the Food of our Enflamed Souls, for ten Days, till I applied my self to Satyrus, to furnish me with some Stratagem which might possess me of the Embraces of the Mistress of my Heart. He replied an immodest Attempt would forever disable you to purchase your desire; you must first make her sensible of your Pain, before she'll perfect the Cure. When you have done this, you may depend upon the Fidelity and Care of Satyrus and to Encourage you, I believe I can interest her Servant in an Intrigue which may perhaps put an end to your Expectation: I was extremely revived with this Encouragement, and resolved to compose my Looks, and recal my Courage to the Assault; I strove to convince my self of the Danger of being Timorous morous by the following Expostulation : Can I expect that she should Address me, or can I look that she declare her Passion first. No ! I had scarce spoken, when I met the Sole Object of my Desires. The sight of her daunted my Resolution and overspread my Face with Paleness. I stood trembling for some time, at last staggered out : Madam, I am your humble Servant. Are you my Servant she said, then I have one more than I thought ? I am as much devoted to your Service as the Renowned Hercules was to Omphale. We were both of us at a Loss for something to continue our Discourse, when an Accident of the Day before came very Fortunately into my Mind. Her Servant Clio, as she sat by her, playing on her Lute, was Stung by a Bee upon the Hand. Leucippe as soon as she perceived it, laid aside her Lute, and held the Diseased Part to her Lips, and muttered

tered over some Enchantment, which immediately gave her Ease. So just as our Discourse ended, a Wasp flew about me, I instantly clapt my hand to my Lips, and Lencippe as hastily removed it, asking me what part was hurt, I told her my Lip, and desired her Assistance, she then put her Lips to mine, and in the space of the Fascination, I ravished an hundred Kisses, as her Lips in her speaking closed to mine. This Animated my Confidence so, that I was a little more pressing, and had just grasped the Prize in my Arms, when she started back and told me, she hoped I meant nothing Dishonourable. Not in the least, My Angel, I replied ; so I renewed my Assault upon her Lips, and enjoyed the Pleasures of Elysium, till we spied her Woman coming toward us, and parted with Sorrow on both sides through different Doors.

'Twas

'Twas not long after, e're we were called in to Supper. Satyrus had now a great insight into our Designs, and contrived a very nice way for us to convey our Affections from one side of the Table to the other. When I called for any Liquor, he'd observe from what side of the Glass I drank, and then he'd fill in the same Glass to Leucippe, turning that part of it towards her which was still warm with my Lips. This small Satisfaction diverted us very much, and I thought it an ingenious invention of Kissing at a Distance? Satyrus had engaged her Woman Clio in my Cause, and had disposed every thing so, that we might have a private interview that Night, Panthia the Mother of Leucippe was in Bed, the Servants busie in the Affairs of the House, and her Woman Clio stept aside on purpose: In short all was clear, and Leucippe alone in her Chamber, I knocked gently at the Door, and she perceiving who was there, opened it very easily, when I came in I saluted her, and desired her to sit down upon the Couch. When the Pleasant Toyings and Fondnesses of Love had passed between us, and she seemed prepared to admit Addresses of a Superior Nature ; I was obliged to retire without taking that leave of her I designed by the noise of some one upon the Stairs. I was extremely vexed that I lost the opportunity and despaired of ever having such another in my Hands, I met Satyrus as I went, who laught and told me 'twas he who disturbed us, by giving notice that some of the Family were coming up.

My Father had all this while been perplexed with strange and amazing Dreams, which hastned his preparing for the Celebration of my Marriage with Caligo, accordingly, she was Adorned with all the Splendor
the

the occasion required. Her Bracelet sparkled with Diamonds, and her Purple Vest was Embroidered with the finest Gold. In short, nothing was wanting to Illustrate her Charms, or which could make her appear a Consort, worthy the Greatest Monarch in the Universe.

The Sacrifices were performing with Great Splendor, whilst I was in the greatest Anxiety to think of some Stratagem to defer the Approaching Ceremony. While I was taken up with these Thoughts, I heard a prodigious shout, and ran to know the occasion of it, and found that when the Victim was Slain an Eagle snatched it from the Altar in spight of all Opposition made by the Assistance.

This my Father looked upon as an ill Omen, which occasioned him to desist from the Ceremony. He then consulted the Augurs who Pronounced that he must Sacrifice to Jupiter Hopitalis the Patron of the Bird which disturbed his Devotion. But all was of no Effect, since the Eagle appeared no more. This Accident produced a great Satisfaction in me; I could restrain my Acknowledgements to the Prince of Fowls. The Event of the Omen was this: Calisthanes a Dissolute Young Gentleman of Byzantium had heard much of the Charms of her Beauty before she left that Place. He applied himself to Sostratus her Father for his Consent to Marry her, but was refused. This denial he resented very much, and vowed a Revenge in his Mind: There was at that time a heavy War between Thrace and Byzantium; wherein the latter were extreamly reduced. In this Distress they consult the Oracle who reported that they must send a select Number of Youth with all necessary Preparations to Sacrifice to Hercules.

gules of Tyre. Calisthenes was one of the Number, and to Accomplish his Designs, he obtains leave of the Commander of the Enterprize to Sail to Tyre in a Frigot of his own, which he furnished with such as he knew would make no Conscience of Villany. When he arrived at Tyre, he informed himself that the Sacrifice for my Espousals was to be performed on the Morrow. Accordingly he Dresses the Crew of his Ship in Women's Cloaths, who passed for such without the least Suspicion : He ordered each of them to provide themselves with Weapons to defend the Attempt. In this Disposition his Company came to attend the Sacrifice, and when they saw an Opportunity, they laid Hands on Caligo, boarded her upon the Frigot, and immediately struck Sail for Byzantium. The Occasion of this mistake between Caligo and Leucippe was that Leucippe would not come abroad on the Day wherein she was to lose for ever her Dearest Clitophon, and Caligo, being the greatest Figure among the Ladies easily past before the Strangers for Leucippe.

Thus were my Designs of Intercepting my Marriage with Caligo very fortunately Accomplished. This added fresh Courage to my Addresses to Leucippe, and when ever I had the happiness of her Company alone, I pressed her with something soft and tender, and was at last Emboldened to speak to her in the following Manner. How long my Angel shall we subsist upon the unripe Fruits of Love? How long shall we be Scholars before we are admitted to enjoy the Mysterious Bliss? Every Glance from my Dearest Leucippe enrages my Passion, and every touch of her tender Lips causes Emotions in me, which tell me they must be satisfy'd.

We

We have now no Reason to distrust our Mutual Affection, let's then drown it in Enjoyment. She could make no Answer but Sigh'd, and I apprehended some uneasiness in her, which informed me I had vanquished every thing which opposed an Access to my Happiness.

All that I now wanted was an opportunity of Privacy, and to obtain one I knew would require the Greatest Caution. For Pantbia Leucippe's Mother's Apartment was next to hers, nothing but a pair of Glass Doors Divided them, the Careful Panthea always attended Leucippe to Bed, nor could she still her Anxious Thoughts for the Honour of her Daughter, before she saw her a sleep, she then locked the Doors her self, and laid the Keys under her own Pillow. This was a Difficulty too arduous for me to surmount, so I applied my self C 5⁴ to

to the Invention of the trusty Satyrus for a Trick.

There had I believe been an Intimacy of Intrigue between Satyrus and Clio, Woman to Leucippe, and her Mother. He prevailed upon her to engage Secrecy in the Affair, and to let him see the Keys of Leucippe's Apartment. When he had done this, he carries them to a Workman, and ordered him to make him others like them. He then delivers the Keys back to Clio, and receives the Patterns of them from the Workman. Now he thought all ripe for Execution except that one Conops, a fly undermining Radical in the Family, made it his Business to observe our Motions, and to dispatch him, he invites him to a Collation which Conops willingly accepted of, and when he had charged pretty Home with Brimmers, he gives him a sleepy Potion which was sure to secure him till Morning.

I then

I then took the Keys from Satyrus, ordered him to give notice if he heard any noise, and entered the Chamber. The Passions of Joy and Fear had Alternate Rule over my Spirits. My Mind was perplexed with the fear of some Approaching Danger, and enlarged with the Hopes of Success. Her Mother as ill Stars would have it, Dreamed that a Russian had entered the Chamber of Leucippe, dragged her out of Bed, and ript up her Bowels with a Sword. In this Horrour she starts out of her Bed and runs into Leucippe, Satyrus was trembling at the Door, and I conveyed my self out of the Chamber as secretly as possible, and standing at some Distance, heard the old Woman in the following Exclamation : Lascivious Girl, thou hast now Defeated all my Hopes, thy Father knows not of thy Shame, but bravely Defends his his Country from the Common Enemy, while some Villain has deflowered his Daughter ; would to Heavens thou hadst been still at Byzantium, that the Fortune of War had subjected thee to this Shame, that some Thracian Conqueror had Ravished thy Charms, his Violence had extenuated thy Guilt, but now all the Shame and Infamy is upon thy self. Too true was my Dream, better the Sword of the Russian had been Sheathed in thy Bowels than this Conquest been Committed upon thine Honour : Leucippe trembling, Replied, 'tis you my unnatural Mother, who taint my Honour by attacking it with undeserved Reproach. The Person who so rudely invaded my Apartment might be a Heroe for ought I know ; I lay Astonished and Divested of the Power of Crying out for Assistance, but Fear had not such an Ascendant over me as

as to disable me to secure my Innocency, a Prize more Dear to me than Life. With this Satisfaction Panthia retired into her Chamber and left the Distressed Leucippe to lament the Loss of an Happiness she had so long Desired. How to extricate my self from this Calumny I knew not. I went to Clinias to advise me in this Difficulty. He proposed that the whole Intrigue would come to Light, and that then 'twould be impossible for me or Leucippe ever to be Happy; that there were Ships in the Harbour bound for Alexandria, and the only way would be for us to Embark, Clio was in the Greatest Danger (Poor Girl) for she would be sure to bear the Vengeance of the Incensed Mother alone, should we leave her behind us; and to take her with us would be Inconvenient nient, so clapt some Pieces of Gold into her Hand; and sent her on Board a Ship which struck Sail that Night, telling her she might be sure we would follow her with all Expedition. All the Difficulty was to convey the Dear Leucippe to us. This Province I committed to Satyrus, who finds the old Panthia sleeping, and Leucippe in Tears for the Loss of her Clitophon she was in Transport when Satyrus told her he would carry her to Me. To Clitophon (she Replied) wherever he be. Accordingly she came to us and brought her Jewels, and what other Things of Value she had with her, and so she, I, Clinias and Satyrus went on Board a Ship which was bound for Alexandria the next Morning.

We had not been long on Board before an Egyptian, a Gentleman

Gentleman of Great Civility, invited our Company to a Collation, accordingly we joined our Provision, and when we had asked our Names of each other, we diverted the greatest Part of the Night with Delightful and Amusing Stories, too tedious to be inserted.

T H E

THE AMOURS
OF
Clitophon and Leucippe.

C-H A P. III.

they take Shipping for Alexandria. They fall into the Hands of Thieves. Clitophon Deserts from them to the Enemy. They Sacrifice Leucippe (as they think) tho' she's preserved by the Cunning of Menelaus and Satyrus, who Arrived there from the Shipwracks. They bring Leucippe to Clitophon, who is much respected by Charmides, General of the Army.

E had very good Weather at Sea, till the Third Day. It grew nient, so clapt some Pieces of Gold into her Hand, and sent her on Board a Ship which struck Sail that Night, telling her she might be sure we would follow her with all Expedition. All the Difficulty was to convey the Dear Leucippe to us. This Province I committed to Satyrus, who finds the old Panthia sleeping, and Leucippe in Tears for the Loss of her Clitophon she was in Transport when Satyrus told her he would carry her to Me. To Clitophon (she Replied) wherever he be. Accordingly she came to us and brought her Jewels, and what other Things of Value she had with her, and so she, I, Clinias and Satyrus went on Board a Ship which was bound for Alexandria the next Morning.

We had not been long on Board before an Egyptian, a Gentleman

Gentleman of Great Civility, invited our Company to a Collation, accordingly we joined our Provision, and when we had asked our Names of each other, we diverted the greatest Part of the Night with Delightful and Amusing Stories, too tedious to be inserted.

T H E

THE AMOURS
OF
Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. III.

ARGUMENT.

Their Vessel is Shipwrack'd. Clitophon and Leucippe Sail upon a Plank. Satyrus and Clinias are separated from them. The former are driven upon the Coast of Peleusium. There they

they take Shipping for Alexandria. They fall into the Hands of Thieves. Clitophon Deserts from them to the Enemy. They Sacrifice Leucippe (as they think) tho' she's preserved by the Cunning of Menelaus and Satyrus, who Arrived there from the Shipwracks. They bring Leucippe to Clitophon, who is much respected by Charmides, General of the Army.

E had very good Weather at Sea, till the Third Day. It grew dark suddenly, the Wind arose and blew with Violence, the Waves rose and dashed against the Vessel, the Confusion of the Mariners made us all Despair of safety, their Imprecations and Curses made us believe we were in the Regions of the Accursed, than the Realms of Neptune.

In

In short all Hopes of safety were lost, so we submitted our selves to the Disposal of Fortune; the Pilot commanded the Long-boat to be Launched, and with those whom he chose went into it, so were we left desolate of help, and surrounded with Danger ; at last the Wind bore very hard and drove the Ship upon a Rock, which split her in Pieces, Menelaus and Satyrus bestrid the Main-Mast, Clinias rode upon the Sail-yard : The Distressed Leucippe and my self got upon a Plank of the Stern which wafted us to Peleusium, when we Landed we Praised Heaven for our Miraculous Deliverance, and bemoaned the Fate of our Companions, whom we thought Devoured by the Fury of the Deep.

When we came to Peleusium we spent some Days in observing the Curiosities of the Place. Nothing gave us greater Delight than two Paintings Paintings of Evanthus's Drawing, the one Represented the Distress and Deliverance of Andromeda, the other that of Prometheus, each had his Executioner prepared, and each a Grecian Champion to Deliver them, both of them sat upon a Rock, that which supported Andromeda was hollowed just enough to contain her; the Work was so exact that it seemed to be the Production of Nature not of Art.

The Beauty of the Virgin exacted your Admiration whilst her Chains, and the Whale gaping to Devour her, drew your Compassion, her Air discovered the modest fear she was under of her Sufferings. Her Vest was white as Snow, wrought of the Feathers which the Indians gather from the Trees. Before her appeared the Whale, threatening immediate Death when Perseus was Discovered Flying from Heaven with a Scarf over his Shoulders, Shoulders, and Wings upon his Feet, in his left Hand was the Gorgon's Head in all its Terrors, in his right, he held a Spear which was directed against the Mouth of the Voracious Fiend.

Prometheus was bound with Irons to a Rock, Hercules stood by him with a Bow and Arrow in his Hand, an Eagle fed upon the Liver of Prometheus; her Food grew up as fast as she devoured it. She stood upon his Thigh, which by his Contracting it for Pain gave stronger hold to her Tenacious Talons; the Picture very naturally expressed the Violence of his Torment and the Agonies which oppressed him.

In this Distress Hercules drew his Bow, the Arrow was no sooner brought back to the Head than you could perceive it Discharged into the Heart of the Eagle; Prometheus Distracted between Hope and Fear, cast his Eyes upon his Deli-

Deliverer, on whom they would for ever have dwelt, had not the Violence of his Anguish withdrawn them to behold a more Displeasing Object.

When we had staid here some time to refresh our selves, we hired a Vessel to Transport us to Alexandria. In the Voyage, we rode up to an Harbour to take in fresh Water, when we were alarmed with Cries and Shouts that the Shepherds were upon us, they had no time to secure themselves by flight, for the Banks were instantly filled with Numbers of Barbarians. They sent about twenty on Board our Ship, who rob'd us of all that was Valuable in it, and left us bound in Custody of some they left to take Charge of us. They informed us that we must continue here till Morning, and that then we should be carried before their General, who resided two Days Journey from from the Shore, when Night drew on our Keepers fell asleep, but the Thoughts of our Calamity deprived us of the Refreshment, and gave me opportunity to lament our Condition.

What have we perpetrated against Heaven to deserve these Misfortunes to be in the Hands of Barbarians, destitute of help. What Prayers shall I use to asswage their Fury, since whatever I say, they can't understand ; what Mercy can I expect, when my Affliction disables me to ask it. But why do I thus bemoan my own Fate, when Leucippe's ought to command my Grief, with what Mouth shall I complain, with what Eyes shall I weep; thou hast been Tender and Constant to the most Miserable Man in the World ; and behold the Reward of thy Fidelity ? A Dungeon, is thy Bridg-chamber, the Earth thy Bed, Ropes and Chains are are the Bracelets to adorn the Nuptials ; we had no Reason to thank the Mercy of the Waves, since they have preserved us to a Misery greater then themselves could inflict.

These Expostulations drew on the day and the first Object we could descry, was a Black Man riding to the Shore, with the Greatest Expedition ; when he came up to us, he declared that their King had determined if any Virgin was among the Captives, she should be offered a Sacrifice for the Army. Leucippe with this News held fast by her Clitophon, who was unable to resist Numbers of the Enemy, so they led us away by Violence.

We had been scarce two Hours upon our Journey, when we discovered a Troop of Soldiers Marching up to us. Our Guards immediately put themselves in Order to receive an Assault, and to secure us, disposed of us in the middle of their Body.

When

When the first Charge was given, the Attack was carried on with great Vigour and Bravery on both sides. At last we perceived our own Party in Great Confusion and Distress, and resolved among our selves to break through the Ranks and go over to the Enemy, at first they prepared to Fight, but when they saw our Chains they apprehended us to be Captives, they received us into their Army, and disposed of us in their Rear, to secure us from Danger.

When the Evening came, and the Thieves were dispersed, the Captain of these Soldiers whose Name was Charmides, sent for us all to his Quarters, and when we came there, he required each of us to give an Account what he was, and the Reason of our falling into the Hands of the Pirats. When he was satisfied of these Particulars, he commanded us to follow him, and and told us we should be furnished with Arms in order to attack the Grand Body of the Thieves, as soon as some of his Recruits arrived. I had before been very much used to Ride, and desired I might have an Horse. As soon as I received it, I gave Charmides such Proofs of my Skill, that he invited me to sup with him that Night.

When we sat down he desired me to divert the Business of War, with a more particular Relation of my Story, which produced such Compassion in Charmides, that he ordered me an Aegyptian slave to attend me.

The Business of the Army, the next Day, was to fill up a Trench which was open between us and the Enemy: while we were upon the Work, we discerned an Altar which the Thieves had erected; near it was a Sepulchre. Two of the Thieves led a Virgin bound up to the Altar, whom I discover'd to be Leucippe. They pour'd Oyl upon her Head, and omitted no Ceremony usual at a Sacrifice. Whilst an Ægyptian Priest sung an Hymn, a Signal was given, all retir'd from the Altar, but he who was to slay the Victim, who when he had tyed her to a Stake, thrust a Knife into her Breast, and opened it down till the Intestines appear'd, which they took out and boiled, and then distributed to each Man his Share of them.

Our Captain and Soldiers were amazed at the Cruelty of the Fact, I beheld the Ceremony concluded in the most pungent Pangs of Grief. They laid her in the Tomb, cover'd her with Earth, pulld down the Altar, and departed without casting one look backward.

Our Trench was filled about the Evening, and our Army encamped on the further side. Charmides perceived ceived me sorrowful, and applied all means to sooth my Passion, but all were ineffectual.

Oh wretched Lucippe ! Thou most unfortunate of Women ! Thou diedst in a foreign Country a Sacrifice to the Rage of inhuman Barbarians. Their unhallowed Hands have violated thy Charms, and buried thee in an infamous Sepulchre ; Thy Bowels were a Feast to the most profligate Miscreants. What Patience can support this load of Sorrow. A strange Banquet This ; but the Gods will not see it unrevenged. When I had ended my Lamentation, I set my Sword to my Breast ; when I spied two Men running up to me, whom I thought to have been Thieves ; but when they came near, I discovered them to be my Friends, Menelaus and Satyrus, whom I thought lost in the Tempest at Sea. This unexpected sight did not at all alleviate my Grief, I could hardly express any Satisfaction for their Arrival : They endeavoured to wrest the Sword from my Hand, but I conjured them to desist. Envy me not (said I) the Glory of dying for Leucippe ; detain me not any longer from the only Relief of my Afflictions ; should you compel me to live, I can't without Leucippe : There is a Sting of Grief which torments me. Let me not be ever wounded and never die. If Leucippe (said Menelaus) be the Cause of your Distress ; Think not of her more, for she lives. He stamp'd upon the Tomb with his Foot and commanded her to testifie the Truth of what he had said ; He then opened the Urn, Leucippe came out in the most ghastly Appearance, disembowel'd from top to bottom ; she instantly cast her self upon me, and both of us stood astonished at this sudden return of Joy.

When

When I recovered, I desired Menelaus to keep me no longer in suspense. Is not this the Hand of Leucippe which I press? Are not those the Lips whose touch have so often revived my Soul? What then did I see Yesterday, was it a Dream? And is not this the Living, Divine Leucippe? Menelaus desired I would retire out of sight, and promised I should see the Wounds of Leucippe healed, and that he would restore her to me in all her Charms. I was long before he could prevail upon me, but at laft I complied.

I had not been away above half an Hour when he called me again: I beheld Leucippe entire and souud: There was now no appearance of her being Disemboweled, she looked as beautiful as ever. I conjur'd Menelaus to unravel the Mystery, for I thought my self deceived by the delusions of Magic.

'The Tempest (said Menelaus) cast us upon the Coast of Ægypt, where we were taken by the Pyrats of this City. Some of them knew me, and led me to their Captain, who commanded me to be released from Irons, and to assist them in the Conduct of their War. . When I found my self so well received, I desired that Satyrus might have his Freedom ; the General replied, he could not grant my request ^{at} before I gave some evident Proof of my Valour in the Service. They consulted the Oracle about the event of the War ; It pronounced that a Virgin should be sacrificed for an Atonement for their City, that part of her Liver should be eaten, and her Body interred in a Sepulchre. How we dissipated our Fears for Leucippe, Satyrus will inform you.

Satyrus assumed the Relation, and said ; I was in the greatest Distress in the World when I understood stood the Destiny of Leucippe. I applied to Menelaus and begged of him to think of some Means for her Deliverance. He seemed entirely willing to serve her, but could not conceive any Means which could preserve her from Death. In this Perplexity we walked along the Shore, when we spied a Vessel riding at no great Distance, another Ship boarded her, and brought her to Shoar. The Pirates desired Menelaus, for they observed how much he was respected by their Captain, to examin the Cargo of the Ship, and take what he pleased of it to himself. Accordingly when he was looking over the Goods, he found a Trunk very strongly closed, which he thought contained a great Treasure, but when he opened it ; contrary to his expectation, he sees nothing but a short Cloak and a Knife, with a very long Haft, and a Blade not above :

above three Fingers in length; He was curious to know the Meaning of it, and drawing at the Blade, it came out very far, but when he fixed it against any thing hard, it shrank into its Sheath: I desired him to take care of the Instrument, and when we were alone, told him, it would effectually preserve Leucippe. We bound up the Entrails of a Lamb, in a fine piece of Cloth, and desir'd her to place it under her Vest, that the Knife might penetrate that, and leave the Womb of Leucippe untouched.

Fortune was still propitious, for when we had provided thus far, the General sends for Menelaus, and desired him to perform the Office of Priest in the Sacrifice, which he accepted. When the Day came, Leucippe was brought Cloathed in a Vest which reached to the Ground, She was laid upon the Altar, Menelaus opened the Entrails of the Lamb

Lamb, and when he had delivered the Liver to be eaten, he interred Leucippe in a Tomb. Thus was the Design accomplished without the least suspicion of Fraud.

When Satyrus ended, I was in the most intricate perplexity to know how to reward Menelaus for his Care and Fidelity: All that was in my Power I did, I embraced and adored him. When I saw my self secure in the Possession of the Dearest Leucippe, we went to the Camp; I introduced Menelaus to Charmides, who received him with great satisfaction: He enquired of Menelaus the number of the Thieves, he replied, their main Body was in the next Village, and that he thought it might amount to Ten Thousand Men. Charmides was not at all dismayed, but answered, I should not doubt of a Victory with Five thousand of my Soldiers, tho' I expect Two thousand more from the Isle of Delta in a few Days.

Whilst he was going on in this Discourse with Menelaus, there caine an Express from Delta with Advice that the setting out of his Recruits was deferred Five Days, by reason of some ill Omens they observed when they began the March.

THE AMOURS
OF.

Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. IV.

A R G U M E N T.

Carmides is extremely Courteous to Clitophon. He desires Menelaus's Interest to procure Leucippe to his Embraces. She drinks a Poysorous Portion. She's Lunatick eleven Days. She recovers cippes. We douna up the Entrails of a Lamb, in a fine piece of Cloth, and desir'd her to place it under her Vest, that the Knife might penetrate that, and leave the Womb of Leucippe untouched.

Fortune was still propitious, for when we had provided thus far, the General sends for Menelaus, and desired him to perform the Office of Priest in the Sacrifice, which he accepted. When the Day came, Leucippe was brought Cloathed in a Vest which reached to the Ground,
She was laid upon the Altar, Me-nelaus opened the Entrails of the Lamb

in my power I am, - and adored him. When I saw my self secure in the Possession of the Dearest Leucippe, we went to the Camp; I introduced Menelaus to Charmides, who received him with great satisfaction: He enquired of Menelaus the number of the Thieves, he replied, their main Body was in the next Village, and that he thought it might amount to Ten Thousand Men. Charmides was not at all dismayed, but answered,
I should not doubt of a Victory with Five thousand of my Soldiers, tho' I expect Two thousand more from the Isle of Delta in a few Days.

Whilst he was going on in this Discourse with Menelaus, there came an Express from Delta with Advice that the setting out of his Recruits was deferred Five Days, by reason of some ill Omens they observed when they began the March.

T H E

THE AMOURS
OF.

Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. IV.

A R G U M E N T.

Carmides is extremely Courteous to Clitophon. He desires Menelaus's Interest to procure Leucippe to his Embraces. She drinks a Poysorous Portion. She's Lunatick eleven Days. She recovers by the Application of an Antidote which one Chæreas procures. Carmides is kill'd by a Stratagem of the Enemy; who are entirely defeated by a Fresh Reinforcement of Soldiers. Clitophon, with his Friends, among whom he receives Chæreas, set out for Alexandria.

CHARMIDES when he was informed of the Strength of the Enemy, and the Delay of the arrival of his Troop! resolved to return to the Village from whence he came, and there to expect their coming. When Leucippe and I came thiere, we found a more convenient Lodging provided for us than the General himself. When I entered her Chamber I embraced her, hoping now to be possessed of the Prize I had undergone so much to obtain. How many Calamities have we been Involved in, we have been Ship-

Shipwracked, fallen into the Merciless Hands of Pirats, who would have sacrificed you to their Fury. Let's therefore while we have Opportunity, enjoy it, lest some Misfortune should again Separate us, and oblige us to suffer for neglecting an Occasion which was in our Hands. Leucippe answered, 'Tis in Vain for you to Wish for what you so eagerly Desire. Whilst I was condoling my Distress, the Goddess Diana appeared to me in a Dream and spoke in these Words; Weep not Leucippe, For thou shalt not Die, I will protect thee as long as thou preservest Thine Honour, And as a Reward for thy Virtue, I'll promote Clitophon to thy Embraces as soon as it will consist with your Mutual Happiness. This promise of safety revived my Spirits, and recalled to my Memory what I Thought upon the Night before. I saw the Temple of Venus, and when when I would have entred it to pay my Devotion. to the Shrine, the Doors were closed against me, which gave me a great deal of Uneasiness. Immediately appeared to me a Woman who resembled the Shrine, and told me, it was not as yet lawful for me to come into the Temple, but that if I would wait the Pleasure of the Goddess, it would not be long before I should not only have Access, but be admitted Priestess to the Deity. These Answers inclined me to withdraw my Addresses, and subject their Importance to the Determination of Fate.

Not long after, some Sea Monsters and other Curiosities were presented to Charmides, who invited us to a sight of them. I observed some Emotions in him, which declared how much he was affected with the Charms of Leucippe. His Eyes were always intent upon her, and to prolong their Happiness, he enter-entertained us a considerable time, with an account of the Nature and Production of those Beasts. We had no sooner retired from the Place they were in, but he called back Menelaus, and told him that he was sufficiently convinced of his Fidelity, by the Proofs he gave of it to me. He desired a place in his Friendship, and declared he should endeavour to deserve it. He added, there was but one Favour he desired : The Charms of Leucippe have overcome me, procure her to my Embraces, you shall receive fifty Pieces of Gold for your Reward ; and Leucippe shall ask nothing which I wont grant her. Menelaus replied, whatever Instances of Friendship I express, I can't suffer them to be corrupted by Presents ; you may depend, my Endeavours shall be as Diligent without Bribery, as another's would be for the Treasures of the Universe.

The

The next time Menelaus saw me, he discovered all that had passed between himself and Charmides. I was in the Greatest Perplexity when I heard it, and resolved upon the last Extremity before I would give the least Compliance to the Proposal. To give a Positive Denial of what he could procure by Violence would enrage his Passion. To escape by Flight was to expose our selves to the Rage of a Multitude of Thieves who surrounded us. The only Way which gave the least Hope was, to delude his Expectation till Fortune should discover some Means for our Rescue. This Course Menelaus approved of, and went confidently to Charmides, told him the Affair was dispatched, that the Damsel was a little obstinate to his Suit at the first, but soon complyed when he told her what Rewards she might expect. One thing he must grant before his De-fires

fires could be accomplished, she intreated he would suspend them till her Arrival at Alexandria, because the Village they now resided in was so small that her Reproach would be immediately spread abroad. Charmides was over-joyed when he heard that she complied, but the Delay of his Hopes gave him a great Uneasiness. Menelaus when he observed that, replied ; to heal your disquiet, I tell you directly that she is indispos'd. Let me then (said Charmides) enjoy her Conversation, let me touch her tender Lips, let me hear the ravishing sound of her Voice ; Perhaps those modest Condescensions may allay the anguish of my Soul.

Menelaus , when he returned, repeated the Proposal of Charmides. I was extreamly enraged when I heard it, and resolved that it should never be accepted. I have my self obtained no more than those modest Condescensions
he

he desires. Leucippe's Honour is untouched from her Clitophon. And for a Stranger to tast of her Lips, will be a Reproach which I shall never submit to.

Whilst I thus resented the Offers of Charmides, a Servant brought us word that Leucippe fell down as she walked, and bruised one of her Eyes. We made all the Expedition we could to her Relief, and found her upon the Ground, when I came near, she lifted up her Eye over-run with Blood, and when Menelaus offered to raise her, she resisted him as long as she could.

We then perceived she was distracted, and Charmides when he heard of the Misfortune, sent Servants with Cords to bind her. This was a Spectacle I could not bear: Take away your Cords (I said) leave her to me, my Embraces shall be her Bonds. Let her Rage exert it self upon me, since my Life's Life's uneasy, when the dear Leucippe doth not know me. Did Fortune deliver thee from the Hands of Thieves to deprive thee of thy Senses? Did she rescue thee from so many Dangers to preserve thee to the last Misfortune of being Insensible of thy Distress?

While I was taken up with these Recriminations, Menelaus came to me, and assured me, that such Diseases were not of an obstinate Continuance, but such as tender Years were commonly exposed to, that the redundancy of Blood evaporates into the Brain, and produces these Distempers which were easily dissipated by the Application of Medicine.

Menelaus, upon this, desired Charmides to send the Physician of his Army to her. He was glad of this Opportunity to express his readiness to serve Leucippe. When the Physician came, he said, it was necessary that she should sleep, and gave gave us an Ointment for her Temples, and told us, he would apply some other Physic, when the Ointment had had its Operation.

Whilst Leucippe lay in this oppression of Fortune, Charmides received Letters from the Governor of Ægypt, with Instructions to prepare his Forces with all Expedition to attack the Shepherds. Accordingly, on the Morrow, they were all drawn up in order of Battle within sight of the Enemy.

When the Shepherds saw this, they found they could not delay their Ruin, by force of Arms, had therefore recourse to this Stratagem. All their Old Men they cloathed in the Habit of miserable Petitioners, and placed them to march before the best of their Troops, who followed them in Arms. When they had thus disposed themselves, they addressed Charmides, that, for the sake of their Age, Age, he would take compassion upon the City, that upon this Condition, he should receive an hundred Talents, and as many Hostages for their Fidelity as he pleased to send to the Governor of Ægypt. Charmides rejected the Terms with disdain ; but was at last prevailed upon to a Compliance by their importunity. Let us not die as Criminals without the City ; bring us into our ancient Seats. Let the Place which gave us Birth afford us a Tomb ; we shall then with Satisfaction resign our Lives.

Charmides, upon this, ordered the greatest part of the Forces he had with him to retire to the Grand Army, and led on with the rest to guard the Old Men into the City. As soon as he was within sight of the Gates, they opened them to receive their Friends, and cut down some Dams behind the Enemy, who were presently overwhelmed by the

Vio-

Violence of the Waves. Thus did Fortune ease me of the Anxiety I was under, to secure my Leucippe from the Embraces of Charmides.

Leucippe's indisposition had now been upon her eleven Days. All the Applications of Medicine were ineffectual to abate its Fury. While I sat by her, as she slept, I heard her sigh out : Ah ! Gorgias, Thou art the cause of my Misery. Upon this, I made a very strict Enquiry after one of that Name, but could no where hear of him. As I walked in the Street ; a Gentleman came up to me, and said, Sir, the occasion of my interrupting you is, the recovery of your Lady. One Gorgias an Agyptian Soldier (who has, since, for his Villany, perished in the Battle) prepared a Potion to fascinate her Love, and suborned your Slave to administer it. This Information I have from Gorgias's Servant, who affirms he can compose a Mea Medicine which will effectually expel the Poison, I desired the Favour to see that Servant. When I came home, I called for my Slave, and when I had extorted a Confession of his Villany with rods, I cast him into Prison.

By this Chæreas (for that was the Name of this Gentleman) returned with Gorgias's Servant. He told me he did not at all despair of a Cure, if I could prevail upon Lucippe to receive the Medicine. I then desired him to send for the Ingredients, and to mix them in my Presence, for fear of Treachery. He told me, that he would himself take the same Quantity which he gave her, to convince me that he had no ill Design. He then composed the Medicine, and when he had taken a Dose he slept, and after some Time, awaked without receiving the least Hurt.

This

This Experiment encouraged me to conceive great Hopes of the Recovery of Leucippe. I agreed with the Servant for the Reward of the Cure. When she had taken the Medicine she fell into a sleep which continued till Morning, when it left her, she called me by my Name; With that I started from my seat, and when I came to Her, asked Her how she did. But she being Ignorant of what had happened was amazed to find her self Bound. I then perceived that she was recovered, released the Cords, and relates the Occasion and Manner of her being distracted. When she heard it, she blushed, I embraced and kissed Her a Thausond Times, and then discharged the expence of her Illness and Recovery.

The Shepherds who had surprized Coarmides by Stratagem, were now entirely defeated by a multitude of Men, detached from the

the middle of the Country. So that we were now freed from the Fear of Robbers, and thought we might once more set out for Alexandria without Danger. Chereas for his Service, I admitted into my Friendship, and desired his Company in the Voyage, which he very willingly offered; so we hired a Vessel and struck Sail that Day.

The Noise of the Mariners, the Singing of the Passengers, the Pleasantness of the River, and Smoothness of the Stream, conspir'd to make our Voyage Delightful. But nothing gave me more Diversion than the Sight of a Crocodile. It's Shape resembles both a Fish and fourfooted Beast ; his Body is long and narrow, his Skin rough with Scales, his Breast white, his Legs crooked like those of a Tortoise, his Tail is set with a row of Teeth, with which he drives his Prey to his Jaws, his Neck is immediately joyned to his Shoulders, that you can perceive no space between them, his look is extremely dreadful, especially when he opens his Jaws, the upper of which, alone, he moves, when he feeds, a Property to no Creature besides : His Teeth are like those of a Comb, and many in Number ; his Nature is Amphibious and accommodated to Land as well as Water.

E joyned

THE AMOURS
OF

Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. V.

A R G U M E N T.

They arrive at Alexandria. Chereas invites them to an Entertainment, and carries away Leucippe on Shipboard. Clitophon pursues them, and sees a Woman bound to the Mast; Her Head cut off; and her Body thrown into the Sea. He supposes it to be Leucippe, and takes it up and interts it. He meets with Clinias. Melite, a Rich Lady of Ephesus is in love with him; He prevails with her to defer the Satisfaction of her Desires till they arrive at Ephesus. Leucippe is Sold to Melite for a Slave. She discovers her self to Clitophon. Thersander, Melite's Husband, whom she supposed to be dead, returns, and confines Clitophon to a Prison.

WHEN we arrived at Alexandria, the Structure and Beauty of the City convinced, to my Eyes, what I had long before heard of it. Every thing was so regular and well designed, that it loudly proclaim'd the Wisdom of its Founder. We lodged in an House which Menelaus had provided us. It was extremely well appointed with Furniture and every thing necessary for the Accommodation of Persons of the highest Condition. 'Twas here that I perceived that the Kindness of Chereas to Leucippe, in her Recovery, was occasioned by his Affection to her Charms, and this introduced a Suspicion into my Mind, that Fortune had still some Distresses in reserve for us to overcome.

Not long after he told us that the Morrow was his Birth Day, and that he designed to celebrate it in the Pharus or Watch Tower of Egypt, and invited us to partake of the Entertainment. But as soon as we came out of our House, an Hawk as she pursued a Swallow, struck Leucippe upon her Face. While we were considering the Portent of this Omen, we looked into a Painters Shop where we beheld the Tragedy of Philomela, Tereus, Procne, and her Son, expressed to the Life. This Complication of ill Omens dissuaded us from complying with Chereas's Request that Day, and to return to our Lodging. However, Chereas's Importunity was not abated, so he prevailed with me to promise our Attendance on the Morrow.

Leucippe was all this while Ignorant why the Paintings should occasion our Delay, and desired me to give her some account of the Reason of it, which she said would atone for the Disappointment of the Diversion she promised her self at Chereas's Entertainment. This request, I could not but comply with, in explaining the Allusion in the following manner.

The Birds you saw (my Dearest) were once in Human Shape, and represent the Sisters Procne and Philomela, born in Athens. The first of them was transformed into a Swallow, Swallow, the other into a Nightingal. The Lapwing you saw represents one Tereus, a Thracian, Husband to Procne, who could not confine his dissolute Affection to the Embraces of the lovely Procne, who occasioned an Injury to her self, by her Kindness to her Sister. She had not seen her for a considerable Time, and desired her Husband to take a Journey to enquire of her Health. But he returned the Man who had undone her. He violently invaded her Honour, and to conceal the Fact from his Wife, cut out her Tongue, that she might never be able to disclose it, and then departed to the Embraces of his Wife. But his Attempt was in vain, for the distressed Philotomela devised a Means to inform her Sister Procne of her Reproach, she wrought the History of it in Needle Work, and had it conveyed to Procne, who soon understood the Dishonour she had received.

Her Thoughts were now Intent upon Revenge, and she thought up-on one more detestable than the Injury done to Philomela. She stifled the most obstinate Suggestions of Nature for the Affection of her own Child, she murdered him, and dressed him for part of an Entertainment, to which she invited her Husband. When he fed upon the execrable Dish, Procne brought in the Head, and told him, it belonged to the Limbs he had just now devoured. This enraged him so far, that he pursued the Sisters who had prepared the Banquet, but they in their flight were transformed into Birds, and he suffered the same Metamorphosis in his Pursuit. The Memory of the Fact still survives, for to this Day, the Lapwing pursues the Nightingale.

On the Morrow, Chereas came to demand the Performance of my Promise, and said, a Boat expects us, to carry us over to the Pharus. When we arrived there, he shewed us the Tower which was incredibly built. There was a Mountain congested in the Sea which reached the Clouds, on its Summit was a Tower which was always illuminated for the Direction of the Ships. While we were feeding our Curiosity upon these wonderful Strutures, Chereas feigned an excuse to withdraw. He was scarce out of our Sight when we heard a great Tumult at the Door, which ceased when a Number of Ruffians in Arms set upon Leucippe, and (against all the Opposition I could make, which cost me a dangerous Wound in my Thigh) conveyed her on board a Vessel which immediately set Sail. I had formerly some knowledge of the Governour of the Island, under whom I had served in the Wars. I addressed my self to him, shewed him my Wound, which he ordered a Surgeon to dress, and desired a Pinnace well manned to pursue them. We made all the Sale we could to get sight of them, and when they perceived us, they bound a Virgin to the Mast, and hollowed through a Trumpet, This is our Prize. When we heard this, we presently discerned that they cut off her Head, and hurl'd her Body over-board. I concluded that it was Leucippe, and had not some of our Crew restrained me, had cast my self into the Sea. However, I desired our Commander to dispatch the Long-Boat to take up the Body, and as soon as it was brought into our Vessel, I told him 'twas in vain to Pursue, since we had now recovered her Dead, whom we sought for Alive.

When

When we came to Shore, I embraced the Body, and Kissed it, and took Care to have it interred. All this time I was almost distracted with the anguish of my Wound, and tho' I took all possible Care to have a Cure, it was nine Months before it was compleated.

Some Days after, as I walked in the Market-place, Clinias came up to me ; I was extremely glad to see the dearest Friend I had next to Leucippe ; and when we had embraced and saluted each other, I desired him to relate how he was preserved in the Shipwrack, and what good Fortune had, once more, made me happy in the Sight of him. Before he had concluded the Story, Menelaus and Satyrus came up to me, and when they had welcomed Clinias to Alexandria : They told me that the Patroness of Beauty had now put it into my Power to be happy. That a rich Lady of Ephesus sus was in Love with me, that her Charms were so ravishing, that it would be madness in me to slight the Offer. She has lost her Husband at Sea, and desires you not to succeed in his Title, but the Office of a Gallant. All her Estate and Fortune she resigns to your Disposal, if you'll consent to her Desires, and sure you must comply with them, since you can't now expect that Leucippe should revive.

Clinias continued, I think my self obliged to advance the Proposal of Satyrus, since Beauty, Riches, and Love submit to your Command, you'll not only possess your self of the most delightful Enjoyments, but promote your Credit and relieve your Necessities.

I answered, it is not at present in my Power to comply, I have engaged my self in a Vow to prolong all the Thoughts of amorous Bliss till my Arrival at Ephesus, far from from the Coast where I lost the Divine Leucippe. Satyrus returned with this News to Melite, which gave her an extacy of Joy, she desired he would invite me to Sup with her that Night. When she saw me, she ran up to me, and prested me with a thousand Kisses and Embraces, Freedoms I was infinitely delighted with from a Lady of the Charms of Melite. Soon after we were called to Supper. She had provided a most magnificent Entertainment, and when I ask'd her why she would not tast of it, she replied, Ah ! Clitophon, To behold your lovely Face vanquishes my Appetite, and pleases your Melite more than the most exquisite Delicacies in the Universe : she would willingly have detained me that Night, tho' I acquainted her with my Resolution, and would not part with me till I promised that I would devote my self to her Charms

Charms in the Presence and Temple of the Goddess Iris, on the Morrow, if she would relax her Importance till our Arrival at Ephesus.

On the Morrow, when we had performed this Ceremony, she gave us a Dinner, and because the Wind stood fair, we, that Day, went on Board a Vessel bound to Ephesus.

Menelaus came with me to the Sea-side, and told me, he thought it the greatest Misfortune that his Occasions required his Attendance at Alexandria, and that as soon as they released him, he would, if possible, follow us. Clinias resolved not to part with his Friend, and accordingly, came on Board with us.

For the First Night, Conveniences in the Ship could not be prepared, but that was no stay to the Desires of the enflamed Melite. She importuned me to confirm the Vows.

Vows I had made in the Temple of Iris. We are now (she said) out of the Reach of Leucippe, what need have we to defer our Happiness till our arrival at Ephesus. You know the Uncertainty of Life at Sea, and that we are in danger of perishing before we see Land. I wish your Flame were equal with mine, no Considerations would allay its Heat. We are now in the Native Realms of Venus, where can we so properly do her Sacrifice as here: Here we have the Goddess Amphitrite, and the whole Choir of the Nereides to dance at our Nuptials, while the gentle Winds sing our Epithalamium.

I replied, Let us not, my Dearest, disturb the Manes of the deceased, we are not yet past the Place where the miserable Leucippe was slain. The Waves which support us are her sepulchre, and for ought we know, her Shade hovers about our Ship.

Ship. The Turbulence of the Sea is improper for the Joys of Love, and its Instability may portend an Inconstancy in our Affection.

These Perswasions wrought upon the amorous Widow to suspend her Hopes till we came to Land, which was three Days after. She brought me to her House, which, for Grandeur, Elegance of Structure, Magnificence of Furniture and Retinue, surpassed every Thing which the City of Ephesus could afford. When she had given Orders to her Servants for an Entertainment, she led me to walk in her Garden. I could not but admire the beautiful Disposition of every Thing in it, and had not long entertained my Eyes with the ravishing Objects around them, before a Damsel in the most miserable Apparel, presented her self before the Feet of Melite, and desired she would compassionate the Distress of an Unfortunate Maid, whom whom ill-fortune had reduced from the state of Freedom, to that of a Slave Melite enquired the Name of her Country, she replied, My Country is Thrace, my own Lacena. Melite then asked what unkindness of Fate had subjected her to the Calamities she was oppressed with; She answered, Of all the Difficulties I have overcome, None gave me a more sensible Affliction than Lust of your Steward, which exercised its Cruelty upon me, because I would not comply with his dishonourable Desires. Melite when she heard this, ordered her Servants to take care that she wanted no Necessaries, and when she had rallied Softenes for his Villany to the Virgin, she discharged him from her Service. Not long after this a Servant called us to Supper. We had not long sat down before Satyrus gave a Nod to me; I perceived he wanted to speak with me in Private, vate, I made an excuse to retire from the Table, and received a Letter from him, which I was soon satisfied was written by the Divine Leucippe.

“ She complained that Fortune
 “ had obliged her to alter her Style “ to her Clitophon, since it had “ promoted him to be her Master.
 “ That she had not deserved to have “ his Affections so soon withdrawn “ from her, nor to be so soon for“ gotten, by one she had exposed “ her self to so many Dangers for.
 “ However, since the Decrees of “ Fate were unalterable, she desi“ red, if my Kindness for her were “ not quite extinguished, that I “ would (for now she knew I “ could easily perform her Request) “ lay down the Moneys which “ would be required for her Free“ dom, and give her leave to go to “ Byzantium, to her Relations,
 “ who should return the Sum back “ to

" to me again ; she wished me all
 " Joy and Happiness in my present
 " Wife, and bid me eternally Fare-" wel.

This Letter occasioned the strongest Conflict between the most tormenting Passions, Fear and Hope, in my Mind. I could not believe what I read, nor what I saw. Did Leucippe (said I to Satyrus) send this Letter to me : He answered, she did, Are you sure 'twas given you by her own hand. He affirmed, that it was. I was now in as great an Agonie as before. How could she think that her Clitophon would be inconstant, that he would break his Vows of an Eternal Passion for her. Bring her to me that I may convince her that I love her, and none beside. He replied, Such a Proceeding would defeat all Hopes of enjoying your Desires, since now she's a Slave to Melite, who dies for you ; and would wreak her

Re.

Resentment upon her Captive for being her Rival to your Esteem. All intercourse between you must be by Letters which must be conveyed with the sincerest Secrecy.

I was satisfied of Satyrus's Prudence and Fidelity in the Affair, and ordered him to carry her a Letter. I called Heaven to testify that her Accusations were unjust, that she would satisfy her self that the Flame of Clitophon for his Leucippe burned with as much Lustre as ever. That I looked upon it as the extremity of the Displeasure of Fortune, that we could not see one the other without the Ruin of us both, and that as soon as ever I could wish the Safety of Leucippe, I would give her the strongest Conviction of my Innocence and Constancy; 'till then, I desired she would content her self with being all the Thoughts of her Clitophon.

When I had delivered this Letter to Satyrus, I was in the most difficult Perplexity, how to preserve my Innocence, in respect of the Vows I had made to Melite; for I had resolved that nothing should prevail upon me to do the least wrong to Leucippe. I could conceive nothing more effectual to my Design, than feigning an Indisposition. Accordingly, when I came into the Room where she sat at Supper, I possessed myself of a Trembling in every Joint, and to defeat the Expectations of Melite, at once, told her, a Numbness had spread it self through every Part of my Body. The Lady immediately conducted me into her Chamber, and when she had very officiously taken care of my being in a Place of Repose, told me that lest the Returns of my Illness should be more violent in the Night, she'd lay her self by me to administer some Medicines she had pre-prepared to asswage their Fury.

This last Expression, I thought, presumed very far upon the Vigour of a Person in my Condition. However, I continued my Trembling in despight of all the Charms and ravishing Applications of my Bedfellow. In the height of her Resentment, for my having defeated her importunate Hopes ; In comes Thersander, the supposed deceased Husband of the Widow, into the Chamber, when he saw us in the languishing Postures of Enjoyment, he flew into the most extravagant Rage, called me an Adulterer, tore me from her Arms, struck and bruised me extreamly ; at last, ordered me to the Custody of his Servants.

THE AMOURS
OF
Clitophon and Leucippe.

C H A P. VI.

A R G U M E N T.

Thersander is perplexed how to obtain his Desires from Leucippe. She's obstinate to his Addresses. He abuses her. He commences a Suit against Clitophon; and spreads a Report that Leucippe was was killed. Clitophon, in Despair, confesses that he murdered her. He is sentenced to Death. His Execution is deferred by her Appearance in the Temple of Diana. Sostratus, her Father, arrives at Ephesus, and procures, by his Interest with the chief Men in the City; that the Oracle may determine their Innocence or Guilt. They are pronounced Innocent. Thersander and Sosthenes fly. Clitophon, Leucippe, and Clinias take Shipping for Tyre, where their Nuptials are celebrated.

THE Kindness of Melite pursued me in all my Distress. Whilst Thersander was abroad, she prevailed upon the Servants to be admitted to see me by some private Rewards. She brought a Suit of her own Cloaths with her, and ordered me to put them on, and told me Melantho (for that was the Name

Name of a Lady who attended her) should conduct me from the Confinement I was under to the Place where Leucippe (for Melite's Jealousy had conveyed her away) resided.

Melanthe conveyed me through all the Avenues of the House with great Security, all the Servants were so far imposed upon by my Disguise as to pay me the same Diference with which they respected their Mistress. I then received directions from her to go to Leucippe, who lived in a Country Seat near Ephesus, of Melites. I was now in the most earnest Expectation of seeing the desirable Leucippe, and taken up with thinking how great Pleasure I should take in the Enjoyment of the Conversation of her I loved above the Universe. But I soon perceived that I had not yet satisfied the Vengeance; I was in sight of the long wish'd for Mansion, when I met Softbenes, who had taken an Opportunity from Thersander's Resentment to Melite, to ingratiate himself with his Master, when he had been rejected by the Displeasure of his Mistress. They were both returning from an Entertainment in the Country. My Disguise would have deceived the Eyes of Thersander, had not Softbenes, who was more acquainted with my Person discover'd me to his Jealous Lord. When I had received a great deal of opprobrious Language and other Indignities, I was committed to the Publick Prison of the City. Thither did the Favour of my Widow follow me, which supplied me with Necessaries, and informed me of the Condition of the Dishonourable Leucippe.

Softbenes to revenge the Disgrace he had received from Melite, resolved to dissipate all Hopes of Reconciliation with her enraged Husband.

He

He addresses himself to Thersander, and informed him, that he had purchased a Slave, the most beautiful Creature his Eyes ever beheld ; that he designed the Treasure for a welcome to the Return of his Master, that she was sent by Melite to their Country Seat, and that if he would consent, she should be confined to some Retirement, where he might have an open access to the Enjoyment of her Charms. Thersander was ravished with this News, and conjured his Villanous Pander to use all possible Means to procure her to his Embraces.

On the Morrow he hired a Couple of Ruffians to go with him into the Country to assist the Execution of his Design. When they came, they entred the Room where she was, and violently carried her to a Country House of Thersander's, remote from the Suspicion or Disturbance of any Neighbours. When she arrived there, Sosthenes told her that what he had done was for the Advantage of Leucippe; that he had provided her a Gallant furnished with all the Recommendations of Beauty, Wealth and Riches; and that her removal was only to introduce a Familiarity between her self, and no other than her Master Thersander. He represented to her that the Misfortunes she had suffered were a Punishment for her Obstinacy, and that she might still expect more if she provoked them upon her self by a Relentless Temper. Whereas, would she comply with his Proposal, she would be exempted from the Power of Destiny, since Grandeur, Wealth and Pleasure, did now conspire to make her Happy. Leucippe replied, that his dishonourable Applications served only to invigorate her Resolution, and that the Presence of such a Villain as he, was more Afflicting and Pungent gent than her being a Sacrifice to the Rage of Pirates.

Upon this, Sosthenes returns to Thersander, and inform'd him that he did not doubt but the ill state of her Condition would mollify her to a Consent; tho' at present, she seemed very much indisposed to entertain any Addresses, this with the Description he had heard of her Person, inspired a Confidence into the hopes of Thersander, who immediately takes Sosthenes to conduct him to her. When they came near, they were surprized to hear a Voice, when they knew there was but a single Person; but when they advanced farther, they perceived Leucippe lamenting in the following Manner.

My Misfortunes, will never have an End! Ah, Clitophon, thou knowest not where Leucippe is, nor does she know where Fortune has disposed thee. The height of our Mis-ry is, that we are insensible of each other's Calamities. Thersander has certainly apprehended thee in his House, and exposed thee to some publick Disgrace. I would have enquired of Sosthenes, but had I asked him for my Husband, I should have incensed Thersander against thee. If for a Stranger, how could I enquire of one I had no relation to. Oh ! Clitophon, the only Friend to Leucippe, her faithful Consort in all Calamities ! Whom Beauty it self could not allure ! Whom the Thoughts of Leucippe restrained from enjoying the most ravishing Charms ; should Thersander come to me, should I disclose my self, should I tell him that I am a Freeborn Woman, Daughter to the General of the Army of the Bizantians, that I am not of Thessaly, that my Name is not Lacæna ; should I inform him of this, he would give me no Credit, or if he did, did, my Clitophon's Importunity for my Freedom would be his Ruin: I must put on my Disguise and be still the Slave, the miserable Lacena.

These Expressions gave a sensible Allay to the Courage of Thersander. However, he composed his Air as well as he could, and entered the Room where Leucippe was, without discovering that he had receiv'd the Sentence of Disappointment.

When she saw who approached her, she fixed her Eyes upon the Ground, which received a large Stream of Tears which they distilled. Thersander was dismayed at the coldness of his Reception; and at first seem'd inclin'd to compassionate her Distress. He addressed her with the most winning Sollicitations and Promises of whatever Riches could supply, or Ambition desire. He assured her that his Designs consisted with Honour, and that the power of her Charms would expel and vanquish every thing which tended to deface her Reputation. He protested, that for her he would for ever discard Melite, and legitimate his Happiness in Lacena, in giving her Freedom, and making her his Spouse. She with a Sigh replied; Sir, if my Charms were any, or if they had any such Effect, they would have secured me from the Insult and violence of that Villain who has now the Impudence to appear before me. I expect no other Usage from you, and the only way to rid me of the Apprehension of the Danger of it, is, for the two most odious Men in the World to retire from my Sight.

Thersander when he found his Hopes defeated, lays hold of her Hair, draws her from her Seat, and treated her Charms with the highest Indignities. At last, Softbenes desired him not to defile his Hands

Hands with a prostitute Slave, but to commit her to the Scourge of the Common Executioner of the City. I beg, Sir, said Leucippe, take his Advice, fear me with Irons, Run me through with Swords, know that all the Tortures you can invent, shall not prevail over my Honour, which I am resolv'd to defend in despight of their Rigour.
And when your Rage has discharged it self upon a weak defenseless Woman, my Chastity shall Triumph over your too feeble Assaults.

When he perceived all the means he could use ineffectual, to reduce Lucippe to his Pleasure, he employed his Thoughts to inform him how he should prevent my glorying in my Conquest over him in both his Intrigues. And to damp my Joy for the ill Success of his Designs upon Leucippe, he hired a Rascal to the Confinement of a Prison, that he might have an Opportunity to dis-disclose to me the melancholly News of her being murdered by the Consent and Treachery of Melite: This he look'd upon as a secure way to make me for ever forget the one, and hate the other of my Mistresses.

The Keeper of the Prison (I suppose) had received some of Ther-sander's Gold, which instructed him to prepare his New Tenant a Lodging next to mine. I often heard the perfidious Villain making the greatest Lamentation ; and at last, asked him through a Grate which was between our Chambers, what was the Reason of his misfortune. He answered, very Mournfully, I know nothing I have done to deserve it, but some of my Enemies have caused me to be suspected of the Murder of one Leucippe, a Slave to Me-lite, a Lady of the greatest Quality of any in the City.

These

These unfortunate Tidings rescued me from discovering to him that I was known to the Persons he mentioned, for I was not able to speak. I thought that her Fate was desirable, since I could now be apprehensive of no further Miseries which could befall her ; and lest her Ghost should fear any Distress which should happen to me, I resolved to follow it by revenging her Death upon the Barbarous Author of it.

On the Morrow, I was brought before the chief Judge of the City ; Therfander's Advocates took a great deal of Pains to prove my Familiarity with Melite, and when they were silent, and I was commanded to answer for my self, I confessed that my Intrigue with Melite was real ; and further, that she and I had contrived the Death of her Slave Leucippe, whom she thought to have more interest in my Affection than her self. This Confession alarm'd alarm'd the whole Court, who immediately pronounced Sentence of Death upon me, and resolved before it was executed, that I should be examined upon the Wrack whether what I said in relation to Melite were true. Immediately I was mounted upon an Engine: And when all the People were in expectation of seeing my Torture, a Priest of Diana caused it to be deferred, by informing that a Virgin who was a Foreigner had just before entred the Temple. Such an Accident as this is always effectual among the Ephesians to suspend Execution or Punishment till the Sacrifices are ended.

Sosstratus, as I told you before, was Father to Leucippe, and General of the Byzantians, who had under his Conduct, by the Assistance of Diana, the tutelar Goddess of Ephesus, vanquished their Enemies. In Gratitude to the Deity, ity, he came thither to Sacrifice to her in the most celebrated Temple, sacred to her Name ; when he saw me released from the Engine, he treated me with most insolent Language, and had inflamed the Populace to destroy me, had not my Friend Clinias who was formerly known to him, restrained his Fury till we saw the Person who had lately put her self under the Protection of the Goddess. When we came to the Temple, and enquired after her, we saw with the greatest Pleasure and Amazement to us all, that it was the Divine Leucippe. She ran into the Embraces of her Father, and begged of him to use all possible Means to extricate us from the Difficulties we were under, and to procure my Liberty. A Priest, who was with us, gave his Word for my Appearance till Fortune should reveal the Mystery which perplexed us ; the Kindness of this Gentle-

Gentleman prevailed that my Irons should be struck off.

Sosistratus made all possible Applications to disengage us from the suit which Thersander had promoted to the leading Men of the City. They informed him there was but one way, but that full of Danger. After a solemn Sacrifice, the Oracle of Diana pronounces the Innocence or Guilt, of Persons suspected. When he brought this News to us, we were extremely joyful, and tho' his Natural Affection to his Child suggested some Uneasiness to him for fear of Sentence against her, yet when she declared how willing she was to submit to the Determination of the Goddess, he could not refuse his Consent that she should. He then asked if I dared to resign myself in Respect of Melite, I assured him I should think it the greatest Happiness I could receive to do it. He then prepared a Sacrifice, and desired red the Judges and Priests to attend the Decree of the Goddess. When the Ceremony of the Sacrifice was ended, Leucippe, Melite, and myself, were placed in white Robes before the Shrine. The Priest then implored her Sentence upon the Persons before it, Her Oracle declared us Innocent. Thus were we acquitted. Melite retired with the Acclamations of the People to her House, when she came there, she was informed that her Husband Thersander, and Steward Sosthenes, had conveyed themselves away for fear of Disgrace, and the Rage of the People.

Sosstratus when he had given a Magnificent Entertainment to the Magistrates of the City, took Shipping for Byzantium, and on the Morrow, he, myself, Leucippe and Clinias, went on Board. Whilst we were upon the Sea, he entertained us with the Fortunate Issue of of Calisthenes's Rape of my Sister Caligo, which happened before that I and Leucippe departed from Tyre, and ended in a Joyful Marriage. When we arrived at Byzantium, he detained us three Days to refresh our selves, and then we set off to Tyre, where we ended our Misfortunes to the Satisfaction of our Friends, in the Celebration of the Nuptials of Clitophon and Leucippe.

F I N I S.

